

What About You?

Thinking about your choices and your courage.

In this story, the hero faced a choice between winning and doing what was right. Fear whispered that stopping would mean losing. But courage meant choosing to help, even when it cost something important.

Why was it difficult to stop during the race?

What did the hero risk by helping instead of winning?

Why do you think the other riders kept racing?

Have you ever had to choose between winning and doing what was right?

What does “a different kind of victory” mean to you?
