

WHAT ABOUT YOU?

In this story, the hero faced a moment where the path disappeared and the instruments failed. Fear whispered that turning back would be safer. But courage meant holding the course, even when everything felt uncertain. Courage did not remove fear—it guided the next step forward.

What part of the mission required the most courage?

Why didn't fear disappear during the journey?

What could have happened if the pilot had turned back?

Have you ever faced something that felt overwhelming at first?

What does 'hold the course' look like in your own life?

I choose courage.
