

WHAT ABOUT YOU?

In this story, the hero stood firm when the pressure kept building and fear said to run. The storm was strong. The river was rising. Courage meant staying in place and holding the line, even when it felt impossible.

Why would it have been easier to run instead of holding the levee?

What fears might have whispered to let go?

What could have happened if they walked away?

Have you ever noticed a problem before anyone else?

What would it look like to “hold the line” in your life?

I choose courage.
